Model United Nations - Position Paper

Committee: Venezuelan National Assembly

Member: Haiman El Troudi

School: Lyford Cay International School

Haiman El Troudi is a member of the Pro-Chavista group in the national assembly as he is a supporter of Maduro's government. El Troudi is an engineer, writer, planner, researcher and teacher. He was minister of planning and development in 2008 and the director of office for president Chavez in 2005. El Troudi was elected deputy to the National Assembly of Venezuela by the Miranda state currently in office. His views as a member of the Pro-Chavista group in the assembly strongly agree with President Maduro's Government.

Safety and security in Venezuela is a pressing and complicated problem as Venezuela has both the most violent cities in the world with the highest homicide rates in Latin America. Haiman El Troudi, like all Chavistas, blames the opposition or Democratic Unity Roundtable for the high levels of crime in Venezuela. He claims that the government does not have sufficient funds in order to act against the rising levels of crime. El Troudi claims that the opposition are the reason for Venezuela not having enough money to act against crime as they raise the prices on products as a part of their revolution. The country is economically unstable as prices rise and drop rapidly every week, sometimes even daily. The opposition is raising prices as a part of their revolution to become a democratic government which is causing the economy to crash and President Maduro's current government to lose money. El Troudi claims that crime and safety in the country would improve if the government had the funds but because of the opposition, the government does not.

Venezuela's current economic situation is in complete chaos as prices fall and drop very often, sometimes even daily. Haiman El Troudi's view on the economic crisis is that the economy is unstable because of several protests by the opposition. He claims that the opposition manipulate the prices of the market and cause the prices to rise and drop at a constant rate. The chavistas claim that the protests that the opposition are starting are only making the economy of Venezuela more unstable. Chavez's government started a policy that control the prices of basic necessities in order to stabilize the prices of essential necessities and keep them affordable. This policy should keep the prices at an affordable rate for people living in Venezuela.

Haiman El Troudi, Deputy to the National Assembly of Venezuela, is a member of the Pro-Chavista group and is loyal to President Maduro's government. El Troudi was elected Deputy by the Miranda state in 2015. He agrees with Maduro's way of governing and supports their policies and restrictions. Venezuela has several problems at the moment such as high levels of crime and an economic crisis. These problems need to be solved but there are different methods and debate over which way is the most beneficial method to the country. El Troudi believes that Chavez's and now Maduro's methods of governing are the most beneficial was of governing Venezuela.
