

The 8th United States Congress

Caesar Augustus Rodney - DE

The state of Delaware is currently held under the democratic-republican views of myself, and as we grow to build more united states to the nation, we must make important decisions as a congress to ensure economic success.

Pirate proposal

The Barbary states have been continuously bringing our nation many issues while we export and import goods to other countries. As they make ongoing attacks on our ships of important goods, congress is faced with a decision to make. The creation of a Navy is too expensive for our new country, and being cognisant of the expenses of going to war is critical to economic growth. To defend the land and states we have developed, our government should be focussing on making group for defense here on land a stronger, more powerful one. The treaties that have been made have been successful, and our strategies to avoid the attacks of the barbary states have not been fatal compared to the tragedies of war. The creation of a Navy is tedious work when we are able to solve the problem through diplomacy. We should be considering coming together with other small nations and countries to come together and form treaties, saving costs and consistent troubles. This is ultimately the most strategic choice for our economy to retain stable.

Beliefs on Federal Judiciary system

As a democratic-republican, the individuality of each and every state in our new nation is imperative to growing powerful economic states. The importance of each state setting aside its own laws and regulations gives our nation the distinction to set apart the uniqueness of the citizens who inhabit each state. The necessities of each state differs depending on size, state of economy, and the party running it, resulting in a collective demand for different laws, and different interpretation of the constitution.

Regards to the Louisiana purchase

The purchase of Louisiana would be at the utmost interest of our growing nation. Though much of it is unexplored, the size would double the amount of land we currently have, giving our nation the ability to prosper. Sending out different people to see the value and inhabitants of the land will be essential, however we know that the land will be similar to that of what is already in our possession. We can split the land into several states depending on power of the persons we elect, geographic diversity, and/or people who may already inhabit it. I myself am aware of the Indians that will range through the untouched land, and ridding of them to the west coast and north of Rupert's Land, to make sure they do not interrupt the people that we bring in. In the situation which we must elect individuals to govern the areas of Louisiana, I believe it is in our best interest to call upon people who are wealthy and educated lawyers.
